

South Bend Tribune

Article published Jan 12, 2010

When will Indiana students see the light?

I am writing because I am concerned for my son who has to be out in the dark to go to school in the morning. This is bizarre for us because where we are from in New Jersey, it is light outside around 7 a.m. We have also lived in Texas, California and Maryland and they are also the same as New Jersey: light around 7 a.m.

I have a baby and because of the cold weather it is impossible for me to drag him out to escort my frightened 10-year-old to the bus stop (which, by the way, is quite a distance from our apartment).

It just doesn't make sense to me that Indiana is on Eastern time. The sun certainly does not agree with it.

Angela Warren-Manns
South Bend